Has your question been answered? Mark a post as the best answer! In an attempt to reject a widely distributed report in the U.S. that it was dropping plans to launch an Apple TV app for its Xfinity TV customers, Comcast slammed such inaccurate reporting and wrongly confating a number of issues on its platform strategy. The report suggested that the US cable giant would not use Apple TV for both cable tv services, but also for streaming, and would instead focus on developing Roku-based solutions, which were owned by pay-TV provider Sky and which Comcast now holds after the long-term mega-acquisition in 2018.In its statement Comcast stated that the report contained numerous inaccuracies and wrongly confused individual transactions and relationships from Sky, the NBCUniversal subsidiary and Comcast Cable.In the reply, Comcast said that no such decision was made and stressed that its hardware strategy was broad and varied. While more than two-thirds of our Xfinity TV customers have [the flagship platform for the entire home] X1, today we offer our customers the choice and flexibility in accessing their video subscription on their owned devices. Xfinity TV customers can currently access their subscription via the Xfinity Stream app on iOS and Android mobile devices, computers and laptops via the Xfinity Stream web portal. Customers can also access their TV subscription through the Xfinity Stream app for Roku devices and Samsung smart TVs (and soon LG and Sony smart TVs) or use Xfinity credentials to authenticate more than 130 networks on more than 20 devices, including Apple TV, Roku, Amazon Fire TV, Google Chromecast and Xbox One , among other things, or through CableCARD CableCARD like TiVo. In conclusion, Comcast added that it was active in discussions with other device manufacturers to distribute the Xfinity Stream app through its Xfinity TV partnership program, which said it continued to allow it to expand the range of devices that customers could use.
